Recognize religion and spirituality as important aspects of wellbeing when designing behavioral support programs.
Faith Leaders & the Role of Trust

• Historical trauma has led to a deterioration in trust for societal institutions in Black/African Ancestry, Indigenous, and for People of Color (BIPOC)

• Building trust involves meeting with Faith Leaders on an individual & personal level, rather than as a representative for an organization
Engage with Faith Leaders along with a diverse group of community members who are directly affected by policy changes and program design.
Most Faith Leaders believe in a "prayer plus..." model faith leaders would refer a congregant with depression to mental health professionals.

90%

84%
faith leaders encourage complementing medical treatment with religious activities.
Faith Leaders Are Experiencing Record Levels of Burnout

Pastors have considered quitting the ministry in the last year

41%

Women in pastoral leadership have lost confidence in their calling

25%
Faith organizations are well positioned to provide outreach and referrals to mental health services. Work with them to identify strategies in addressing mental health resources and need within the community.
Formal peer support networks among Faith Leaders, networks in the community (NAMI FaithNet, Pathways to Hope)
Incorporate and expand the availability of peer-to-peer support, community engagement, and coming together.
Bi-Directional Training with Mental Health Practitioners and Faith Leaders Increases Confidence in Systems of Care

Case study: Faith-Based Training and Supports (FBTS) Program in Santa Clara County

- Tailored presentations reaching 3,429 people over three years (2019-2022)

Faith Leaders can serve an active role in 988

Within the congregation
- Spreading the Word on 988
- Encouraging volunteering as crisis counselors at local 988 call centers

Within the community
- Engaging in State Level Activity on 988
- Promoting the expansion of 988 continuum of care, including crisis response services, like mobile crisis response
- Connecting Interfaith Policy Councils with Mental Health Coalitions
Faith Leaders Trained on Crisis Response: Muslim Mental Health First Responder Training for Imams and Community Leaders

- Mental health conditions
- The mental health system
- Empathetic listening and responding to a crisis
- Recognizing the parameters and limitations of pastoral care

1 in 3 participants said they would not have attended the training if it were not Islamic-focused
Recommendation for Policymakers

Incorporate Faith Leaders into the design, implementation and promotion of 988 and the expansion of related crisis response services.
NAMI Initiative: Community Health Equity Alliance (CHEA)

• Advancing mental health equity solutions for Black/African-Ancestry adults with serious mental illness (SMI)

• Delivering community-informed solutions to improve delivery of care and the pursuit of equitable mental health care
CHEMA: Advancing Mental Health Equity

Improving care navigation: creating access pathways for engaging in care, stabilization, treatment and recovery

Elevating crisis mitigation: 988 awareness to support diversion from law enforcement and more

Creating community: culturally inclusive care teams, education, advocacy and more
There is no “one-size-fits-all” approach to addressing the needs of diverse faith communities—it takes community conversations, building trust, and working together to connect all Americans to care they need when and where they need it.
